

Resources for Bereaved Parents

The loss of a child is one of life's most traumatic events.

For those left behind, whether it be a single parent, a married couple, siblings, grandparents or friends of the family, the grieving process is a difficult, unanticipated journey. Grief does not discriminate and it does not follow a set pattern for each person.

While leading causes of infant death in the first year include birth defects, premature birth/low birth weight and sudden infant death syndrome (SIDS), knowing the reason for a child's death rarely provides a grieving family with the comprehensive comfort they need.

We know that bereaved families long for others to acknowledge the importance and life of their child no matter how old the baby was at birth and regardless of how long the baby lived. Having a strong support network where feelings can be shared in a safe and open manner is paramount to the grief process. Sharing memories, hopes, dreams and disappointments is an important part of the grieving and healing process.

We encourage those who are grieving the loss of a child to seek out others who understand the emotions you are feeling and we would like to recommend some organizations that may be able to provide you with the tools you need to face the difficult days ahead. This is in no way a comprehensive listing, but it is a place for bereaved families and friends to start.

A child matters even in death...
